TOMATO BARBECUE

Extensive Preparations for Canning in an Eastern Factory.
 Lewiston (Me.) Journal.
 The big tomato-barbecue has begun in Auburn. If the lover of this vegetable wishes to see the tomatoes scalded, and sacrificed, and flayed, and hacked, and gashed, and squeezed, and jammed, and crushed, and indiscriminately abused until it loses all semblance to shape or identity, then boiled, and afterward suffocated in an air-tight tin can, let him suppress his emotions and "roll down" to the river bank behind Roak Block, Auburn, where the Durham Packing company commenced operations Friday. The tomato goes in smooth, plump, and glowing. In a few minutes it is lost in an oozy, steaming mass of hot pulp, to be stewed away for the delectation of the winter palate. About seven-teen acres of tomatoes were planted for the packing company. If the plants yield well they will put up 20,000 cans, a large part of which have been sold in advance. In the northern part of the county the growers report they have had an abundance of rain, and the crop has not yet ripened. In the southern part of the county the crop has suffered sorely from drought. The tomatoes are there ripening, and in some places before they are fully grown. The yield has begun to come forward, and the packing factory has started on a small scale. The growers are paid 30 cents per bushel of sixty pounds. The company has fitted and enlarged a building on the river bank, and built a platform for balsa. It is supplied with steam from Gross' boiler. Twenty people are employed at the start. When the crop comes in more rapidly the number will be increased to fifty. Some of the workmen have been employed in other factories. Other are green hands. The foreman has been in the business fourteen years.

The tomatoes are first dumped into large shoal pans. They are set in a steaming tank and are scalded for two minutes. This process makes them pop easily. They are promptly passed over to a crew of women with knives, who dexterously remove the skin without regard to any superstitious sensitiveness on the tomato's part. When a peeler gets her pan full, a man takes it to a small but business-like press. The tomato pulp is poured into a hopper which ends in a sort of spout. A can is placed under this spout, and the tomato pulp is pressed into it with a lever. This one press will fill 8,000 cans per day. The cans are fed to it by a spout running from the can factory in an upper story of Roak Block. Every can is weighed after it is filled by a woman who sets it on small scales, and perhaps adds or subtracts a little, as the case may be, to get the balance of just three pounds. The can is then sponged and passed over to the sealer. He solders on the cap. This process is rendered very speedy by a patent capping-iron, one twist of which on the cap securely solders it to the can. This is a big improvement over the old-fashioned soldering capper and is a recent invention.

The cooking succeeds the canning. The cans are placed in pans--sixty in a pan and are set in large tanks filled with boiling water. After they have boiled forty minutes they are ready to cool and are "done." The company will can a small amount of corn at Auburn, and have procured two solid iron retorts for this purpose. Corn requires a more thorough cooking. After a boiling water bath it is steamed for about an hour in these retorts. They are held together by strong clamps, in order to resist the tremendous power of the confined steam. It has only been about a year since it was discovered that tomatoes could be preserved without a second cooking process. Without the steam retort corn must be cooked three hours. The retort reduces the time one-third. The company has already canned a few apples and will can more. They are cooked in twenty-five minutes. It will also put up pears, squash, beans, etc. The company will start its packing factory at New Gloucester next week.

Revitalizing the blood is absolutely necessary for the cure of general debility, weakness, lassitude, etc. The best enricher of the blood is Brown's Iron Bitters.

BARGAINING FOR A CHILD.
 The Surroundings of a Common Enough Traffic in Flesh and Blood.
 From the New York Sun.
 A childless man clipped the following advertisement from a newspaper of yesterday's date and called at the address given:
 For adoption--Two beautiful female children, 3 years and 3 months old; both healthy. 5003 Broome st., over cigar store.
 The crying of several infants upon the second floor was audible outside the store. The visitor entered the narrow hall and climbed the narrow stairs. At the sound of his footsteps a pretty child of about three years came out from a room to the right and ran up to him, and another child of about the same age watched the visitor suspiciously from the door. Both were neatly dressed. A middle-aged lady with a rather kindly face, stepped into the hall, and in response to a brief inquiry led the way into a small room to the left.
 The furniture was neat, but scanty. Two beds, with white counterpane, were set against the wall. On one bed two infants were lying. Both were awake and one was kicking and worrying. The woman picked up the latter, and it at once gazed with quiet interest at the new comer.
 "This is the three-months-old child mentioned in the advertisement," said the woman. "The other child is over on the east side of town. Did you ever see a child three months old who notices things as this baby does? See what a nice skin it has, and feel its flesh. Nice and hard, isn't it? It's a healthy child, and it has a good hold on life."
 "I want to know something about its parentage."
 "Splendid parentage. But I'm only taking care of the child. My sister has stepped out after the lady who has it for adoption. She is a midwife and will be here soon."
 The baby remaining upon the bed was sharp featured, thin and purpy.

"Is that child for adoption?" asked the visitor.
 "Yes. I have charge of that child. Its mother is a mere girl. She used to come here to see it, but I understand the truth has been suspected at her home, and she would not dare come again. Of course, if anybody adopts the child she will not know where it goes. It is a great worry caring for these children. I had nine here a week ago. I board them and care for them. Sometimes the father pays a regular sum for it and sometimes he mother. Occasionally they stop payment and I must get payment for their board from the people who adopt them."
 "You see that little fellow?" the woman went on, pointing to a child who could just walk. "That child wouldn't be for any money. His father pays his board, and expects to marry soon and adopt the child himself. Why, I've had childless mothers, whose husbands were taken out of town for long periods on business, adopt children and deceive their husbands with them. I knew of a husband who discovered the deception, and it was a great blow to him, but he was kind-hearted, and forgave the wife."

A middle-aged woman entered the room, and announced that the midwife was indisposed and dared not venture into the room. She would see the gentleman the next day.
 "I cannot see her to-morrow," said the visitor. "I have time now to call at her rooms, if they are near." The messenger went out again and soon returned accompanied by the midwife.
 "I would not dare," said the latter, "to have people call at my rooms on this business. Neither the people who leave the children nor the people who take them are able to find out afterward. It wouldn't do, you know, and it wouldn't do for them to meet one another either. This baby comes of splendid stock. I can't tell you much more about them, but I can refer to a physician, and she gave a physician's name and address."
 "What are your terms?"
 "You can pay me a small sum of money, whatever you please, and take the child. I am satisfied that you are a respectable gentleman, and that's all I want to know about you. I shall know nothing about the child after it leaves me, and of course nobody else will."
 "Your wife will be pleased with it," said one of the women, "for it looks very much like you."
 "Yes," said the others, "it has your eyes exactly."

Disability persons, and sufferers from wasting diseases such as consumption, scrofula, kidney affections, will be greatly benefited by using Brown's Iron Bitters.
 A Famous Old House for Rent.
 Ford Castle, in Northumberland, England, around which was fought the famous fight of Flodden Field, is advertised to be let, at which anti-quearians are greatly interested. This castle is of great antiquity, though nothing certain is known of it until 1287, when it is matter of history that extensive repairs were made. Toward the end of the fourteenth century it was partially dismantled in a border fray. In 1513 it was captured by James IV. of Scotland. This is the date of the romance of Ford Castle. King James found that Lady Heron, wife of the possessor of the castle, had remained behind to guard it against the enemy while her husband was a prisoner over the border. The king became infatuated with the Lady Heron ere he had long possessed the place, and for her sake, it is said, refrained from destroying it. It was this, say the historians, that cost King James his awful fate on Flodden Field. Lady Heron, in constant communication with the English general, Lord Surrey, who took advantage of the delay and rushed on to Flodden. The room occupied by the king is still preserved in the old portion of the edifice.

The Fascinating Alligator.
 Toronto (Can.) Mail.
 An eye-witness of the following incident writes: "I was at the Zoo yesterday and saw something which is worthy being mentioned. One of the gulls entered the pond where the alligator was lazily propelling himself about, and proceeded to enjoy itself in its native element. But the eye of the scaly monster was upon it, and the magnetic influence of its glance was soon felt. It was impossible for the gull to resist the baleful glare of the scurrying inch by inch it was attracted to the alligator, powerless to resist the fascination, until it came close enough for the reptile to open its mammoth jaws and gulp down the luckless bird. After having devoured its prey the alligator sank to the bottom to digest its meal."

Visible Improvement.
 Mr. Noah Bates, Elmira, N. Y., writes: "About four years ago I had an attack of bilious fever, and never fully recovered. My digestive organs were weakened, and would be completely prostrated for days. After using two bottles of your BLOOD PURIFIER the improvement was so visible that I was astonished. I can now, though 61 years of age, do a fair and reasonable day's work." Price $1.00.

They all Like the Girls.
 Ex-Secretary Blaine has been at the States for two days, he looks well. He refuses to talk politics, but stands ready to flirt with any number of pretty girls at all times. Last night four young girls cornered him on the balcony and commenced asking him questions.
 "I used to know Mr. Conkling at Richfield Springs," says Miss May, "and he was just lovely. He could flirt just as nice as our fellows from the stock exchange."
 "That is not strange," said Mr. Blaine, "all successful politicians like ladies. All successful great men are full of love and sentiment. A man who hasn't heart enough to love a pretty girl can't hold his constituents through two campaigns."
 "You are hitting Governor Cornell and Sam Tilden now," said Miss Enlow from Madison Avenue, "Governor or Cornell is certainly a very cold gentleman. He has been here now two weeks. We girls have been introduced to him, but he freezes us all out. He's a bear." But Mr. Tilden, he is really the coldest man we ever saw. He never can tell one young lady from another. I was introduced to Mr. Tilden five times in one week last summer, and every time he forgot me, and--"

 "No, I don't mean to be personal," interrupted Mr. Blaine, "but I mean to say that a successful leader must have some personal phosphorus in him and--"
 "In fact he's got to feel like kissing all the girls even if he don't like to do it," interrupted Miss Simons of Lexington avenue.
 "Yes, that's just it," said Mr. Blaine, laughing. "That's just it."
 "Did Gen. Garfield like young ladies?" asked Miss Simons.
 "Yes," said Mr. Blaine, "General Garfield was very fond of young ladies. I believe he'd rather sit among a group of young ladies like this than preside over a cabinet meeting, and I know I would."

Frightful Misery.
 Mr. Wm. Pomeroy, Banor, Me., writes: "I have for a long time suffered from continual constipation, making my life miserable, and causing headache and frightful cramps. Mr. Thomas (who has been family visiting in Banor), induced me to try the SERRAVALLO. It has perfectly cured me." Price 50 cents; trial bottles 10 cents.

Coyote Bill Meets a Full-Grown Blizzard.
 Toulstone Epitaph.
 Coyote Bill got his skin full of bugs last night and then it began to draw upon his muddled intellect that he was a "very bad man." He accordingly chassayed into the Dexter saloon and announced himself as the boss wolf from Bitter creek. Grizzly Sam, who was in the act of downing a snifter at the bar, stowed his beverage, cracked his heels and went for the Coyote, sweeping the floor with him and taking one of his ears as a memento. Mr. Grizzly Sam comes from higher up Bitter creek than Coyote Bill.

The Best in the Market.

Wanted the Ball Reduced.
 Some years ago as some of our readers will remember, when Jack Wadkins shot one officer in the leg and another across the abdomen and then went to the fence, got his horse and swung away, leaving the peace and dignity of the Territory of Wyoming and the statute in such cases made and provided, there was a young man with him named Rogers, who was arrested for complicity in the general hilarity of the occasion. When asked why he didn't go with his partner, he said he had started to do so, and on turning around to go out the door he met the familiar features of seven or eight six shooters smiling gladly into his eyes and he changed his mind.
 Rogers was taken before Judge Ritter for preliminary examination and held in $3,000 bail for his trial.
 Three thousand dollars is pretty heavy for a young man who has nothing in the way of real estate but a necktie and the memory of his childhood. He tried to get it reduced, but the judge was relentless. The result was that he went to jail and afterward to the penitentiary for three years.

Later on Judge Ritter got into trouble for embezzlement and was sent to the penitentiary also. He did not want to go, but the jury thought that under the circumstances it could not be avoided, so he went.
 After he had been shaved and dressed up in the eccentric costume of the convict, he was sent out to pile brick with Mr. Rogers. Mr. Rogers recognized him and said:
 "Good morning, judge."
 "Good morning, Rogers."
 "Look here, judge, can't you reduce that ball of mine a little. I don't want to get unreasonably."
A Marvellous Cure.
 For all bodily ailments, arising from impurity of blood, a torpid liver, irregularity of the bowels, indigestion, constipation, or disordered kidneys, is warranted in a free use of BUCKLE'S BLOOD PURIFIER. Price $1.00.
